CALLS A SPADE A SPADE

The jury in the trial of Arthur Pelkey, who was charged with the death of Luther McCarthy, while acquitting Pelkey, have placed on record their finding in the so-called "boxing" bouts by their right name as being to all intents and purposes but prize fights, and as such have been illegal from the first. The jury were unanimous in their verdict that Pelkey was not guilty of the death of McCarthy, but did not state what was the cause, no doubt on account of the conflicting medical testimony. They were equally unanimous in declaring these bouts as prize fights, adding a rider that the government should pass legislation to put a stop to such contests in the province of Alberta, and there is no doubt but what the purport of that rider will be carried out by the government. The tragic end of that contest is pretty certain to accomplish what all the protests against these boxing bouts apparently could not do. Most people, any way, viewed these bouts as prize fights, and none knew it better than Tommy Burns himself. Guess Tommy feels now, however, that it's down and out as far as Alberta is concerned, and that he needs to seek other spots if he wishes to follow his favorite pastime. The only wonder is that he was allowed to continue these prize fights so long. Alberta can get along very well without such brutal exhibitions, anyway. It is nothing for any country to be proud of, and certainly not calculated to elevate the public mind with lofty ideals and that "righteousness that exalteth a nation." The old-fashioned boxing, however, is a healthy and manly sport, and should not be confused with these prize fighting bouts.

STUNG!

The above word has got to be used now a-days as a slang phrase, but its original meaning was terribly emphasized last week in the case of Alfred T. Evans, who succumbed to an injury on his forehead from the sting of a mosquito, dying in great agony on Sunday last in the isolation hospital at Calgary, from blood poisoning, the primary cause being the bite of the mosquito. The deceased had only been in this country about a month, having come to Canada from Plymouth, England, with his father.

Ottawa Citizen: The contention of Henri Bourassa in Edmonton this week that the development of the French language in Canada would be the strongest safeguard against annexation to the United States, is one of the weakest points that gentleman made. By the same token such development would tend to bind Canada the more closely to France. Where is the advantage?

Regina Standard: Mrs. Arthur Murphy, "Janey Canuck," president of the Canadian Women's Press Club, says the women of Canada carry the destiny of the country in the folds of their garments. Mrs. Murphy may be quite right about the destiny, but in regard to the folds—well, there simply "ain't none."

Preserving Eggs for Winter Use

Of all the ways of preserving eggs for winter use there are three that have 100 per cent. good to their credit, says Clark Westford in Suburban Life. These three are immersion in lime water, varnishing with vaseline or lard, and immersion in a solution called water-glass. Of these three, the last named is the best, being simple in process, clean in practice, and comparatively cheap.

Strictly fresh eggs treated with water-glass in a covered earthenware receptacle and kept in a cool place will keep fresh for from eight months to a year without losing any of those properties essential in culinary uses, and without acquiring any distasteful flavor. Repeated experiments and tests have conclusively established the fact that when eggs are strictly fresh and are properly treated and the water-glass correctly prepared this treatment will preserve them for from eight to twelve months.

The preserving fluid is made by adding one part of sodium silicate to nine parts of lukewarm water that has been boiled, and kept covered while boiling, mixing thoroughly. An earthenware jar is a good receptacle to use to store away the eggs in. The receptacle must be earthenware or wood, never metal. A five-gallon jar is a convenient size to handle: it will just nicely hold fifteen dozen. Use additional jars according to the number of eggs it is desired to store. Soak the fluid yourself, as directed, and make it in the jar (or jars) to be used, separately, taking a great deal of care to mix the sodium silicate and water thoroughly. Use only strictly fresh eggs, putting them into the liquid daily as laid. Be sure none is cracked. It is best to test all eggs for cracks—don't rely upon the eye. A good way to do this is to tap two eggs together lightly. If uncracked they will have a true ring; a cracked one, or one with a defective shell, will have a quite different sound that is easily distinguished. Use only clean eggs and do not wash before packing. Soiled or washed shells disqualify the egg for preserving by this process.

The receptacle containing the eggs under treatment must be kept in a cool, dark place. A cellar is a good place if the furnace does not make it too warm. To be kept successfully the receptacle should be kept in as near an even temperature as possible, but never above sixty degrees Fahrenheit. There must be at least two inches of the liquid over the top layer of the eggs, and the jar should be kept covered to prevent evaporation of the water from the silicate sodium.

Some housewives who have unpleasant recollections of "storage" eggs bought in the market may feel a hesitancy about preserving eggs for their winter supply; but if they will once try out this treatment, observing directions carefully, they will become converted and never again be found buying store "fresh" eggs or paying high prices for poultrymen's "guaranteed fresh" ones.

Lightning's Doings at Parkland

While the farmers were shaking hands with themselves on Monday afternoon on account of the very bounteous shower of rain, some strange pranks were being enacted at the home of Mr. Gus Hedlund, who resides near Parkland, which might, however, have had a very sad and fatal ending. During the electrical storm that accompanied the rain on Monday, a very vivid flash of lightning was followed instantly by a heavy peal of thunder, the electric current entering the upper part of the residence of Gus Hedlund, smashing the window to atoms and badly scorching the window frame. The current then appears to have run along to the end of the room, passing through the floor, running down the wall within a few inches of Mrs. Hedlund's head, she having sat in a chair at the end of the room and close to the wall. Instantly she was thrown to the floor in an unconscious condition, in which state she remained for some time. Then followed a strange scene, representing a realistic spiritualist seance. As by an unseen hand, the other occupants of the room, together with the chairs, were lifted up and thrown around like nine-pins, the male portion doing a stunt as if practicing for Staveley's great stampede on the 20th inst. After sundry other high jinks, the electric current made a quick dash for the screen door in the front of the house, passing out through the wooden panel below, leaving behind a large hole. Putting aside all nonsense, however, the family and their many friends are truly thankful to a kind providence in protecting them so mercifully from dire disaster and what might easily have been instant death to one or more members of the family. It was a miraculous escape. No other damage was done beyond what has been recorded.

One billion cigarettes were smoked in Canada last year, which is not a very satisfactory condition of affairs. The curbing of the cigarette habit by legislation would not be unwelcomed by the majority of the people.

When Jimmy Francis reached Abington Village he told the chauffeur of the cab to take him to the hotel. The first of steps he took the hotel of the Fontaine's house. Before the door opened another taxi cab drove up a few yards down the road, and a man alighted from it. He called to the chauffeur to wait and then strode leisurely towards the house where the Fontaine's were to be admitted.

His quick eyes noted the neat appearance of the man. The servant who opened the door. He saw Francis enter and cross the hall with the air of one who knew the place well; then the door closed.

Inspector Heriot looked at the chauffeur of the taxi cab. Happen to know who lives at this place? The taxi cab driver shook his head. No, unless it is the assistant who just entered.

Heriot passed on. He was seated in the little house in turn and every eye of the street. The casual observer would have thought he was passing the time, dreaming perhaps. He was in thought. Inspector Heriot never dreamed. Every moment of his life was spent in work; when he was not studying men and women he was studying their dwelling places, the character of the houses they lived in; their thoughts, their habits, their lives which caused them to think and act as they did.

Presently he retraced his steps, and then he saw advancing on the other side of the road a police-combable. He crossed over and accosted him in a low voice.

Who lives in the house opposite, the one where that taxi cab entered? Mrs. de Fontaine and her son and daughter. She's a widow lady, I believe; been there a good many years. A very respectable family.

Thank it, that's all. He strode across the road again and walked along until he reached his own station. He indicated in a few minutes desultory conversation with the chauffeur. Presently his quick eyes caught a sound unusual to Abington Village. The sound of voices raised in dispute, of scuffling, and the muffled banging of a door. The chauffeur had heard the noise too, but apparently he displayed no interest in it.

Turning aside, Heriot walked back towards the de Fontaine's house, his hands clasped behind his back. His head drooping toward his chest, but his eyes were raised watching the door of the house in front of him. A policeman had disappeared.

Presently he turned, regarding the entrance to the de Fontaine's, which opened and a man reeled out on to the pavement. He saw a moment away slightly, one hand clamped to his forehead, pressing it against his eyes to his face.

Heriot halted; he saw the man speak to the chauffeur and the taxi cab. He had seen the man reeled out on to the pavement towards the house. He saw the man speak to the chauffeur and the taxi cab.

You're engaged too, confound you, he thundered. Two well said, you are engaged, and I am not.

A couple of jokes brought Heriot to the man's side; he looked sympathetically at him, the handkerchief he pressed to his forehead as he stood staring.

There had been an accident, sir, can I help you?

No, confound you, what business is it of yours? the Honourable Dr. Scribner growled.

I thought you were hurt and in pain, perhaps, Heriot replied, with a slight shrug of his shoulders.

Scribner hesitated a moment, and dropping his right hand glanced at the handkerchief. Blood was flowing freely from an ugly cut which ran from the side of his temple across his eye.

Is a matter of fact I slipped on the confounded stone steps; the rain made them greasy, Scribner jerked.

Heriot nodded, then glanced up at the man. He was a fine fellow, I heard a fool, he said diplomatically. You must have had a very bad day.

I believe you to my cab and drive to the nearest doctor and have the wound dressed.

Scribner grunted, and turning, peered into the distance. Then he said to Heriot: I'll accept your offer. By Jove, I feel a bit queer.

The blood was trickling down his cheek; he mopped it up. A very curious fellow, I should say. I have never seen him before.

He was assaulted, Heriot said calmly.

Scribner hesitated and glanced up and down the road. Of course it was impossible to do so. He was engaged to Miss de Fontaine, and without waiting to hear whether or not he was engaged to her, he said to Heriot: I'll accept your offer.

The Tomato
The following important medicinal properties:

First, that the tomato is one of the most powerful purgatives; where calomel was generally used as an aperient, the tomato may be substituted.

The tomato is probably one of the most effective and least harmful of all the medicinal agents known.

Second, that the chemical extract may be obtained from the fruit; it will supersede the use of calomel in the cure of disease.

Third, that it has been successfully used in cases of diarrhoea.

Fourth, that when used as an article of diet, it is almost a certain remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion.

Fifth, that it should be constantly used, either cooked, raw or in the form of catup.

A negro porter in a latter shop made a speech one night at his brother's club. It was quite an effort for him to get up and speak.

What are you doing, Sam? he asked. I'm going to make a speech.

Local News

Born—In Cayley, to Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Elves, a daughter.

Mrs. J. L. Couey left on Sunday morning for Oregon, via Calgary and B.C.

Rev. Mr. Eason will be present in the Methodist church next Sunday evening.

Mr. Dan Drumheller and Miss Drumheller of Spokane are visiting their brother Jack at the ranch.

We are sorry to report Mr. Dave Wicks on the sick list. At last report he is getting along nicely.

What has happened to all the glowing reports from the Vulcan Review? Perhaps it is just "reviewing."

Mr. Paul Newman, representative of the Bank of Hamilton, Cayley, returned from his vacation to Winnipeg on Monday morning. He has been transferred to the Nanton branch.

Eighty-five per cent. of headaches are caused through eye strain, and if you are troubled that way do not fail to consult Mr. Taube at Brown's Drug Store on Thursday, June 26th.

Two of Cayley's boys, C. Phillips and Oliver Grant, were down at Stacey's old-timers' celebration on Friday last and cleared up everything in the running and jumping contests. Phillips came home $10.50 the better, and Grant $11.00.

We are pleased to report that a number of our young men have decided to take the cigarette stains off their finger-ends by not using cigarettes between their lips. They have been under test for about two weeks now, and we hope they will be successful in killing the habit.

The Sunday school picnic which was arranged for the 12th of July has been postponed until Tuesday, the 15th. This change was made on account of the 12th being on Saturday. Everyone should join in and help to make this a day which will not be forgotten by the children. It has been decided to hold it at Williams Coulee, about nine miles south-west of town. Don't forget the date, July 15th.

It appears that, contrary to newspaper reports, the C. P. R. is not actively engaged in construction work between Calgary and Macleod. In a late issue of the Macleod Advertiser that journal does not place much reliance in the misleading reports, for there is nothing doing at the southern end and we all know that there is nothing doing at the northern end of the line.

Preparations for the Calgary exhibition are practically completed, according to reports which some of our citizens bring back who have visited that city. There has been a very large increase in the number of entries in all departments, and in the aggregate the average increase will be about 20 per cent. During the present week the exhibits have been pouring into the grounds, and by the opening day, June 30th, everything will be in readiness. From all that can be learned the special attractions for this year are above the average and in addition are quite a departure from anything that has been presented before. Single fare rates are offered by the railway companies, and in addition there will be four special trains from the north and south, July 1 and 4. The local railway agent reports quite a large inquiry regarding tickets from intending visitors and it looks as though there would be a large local contingent visit Calgary during the first week in July, as the exhibition lasts the whole six days.

Remember the date of Mr. Taube's visit to Brown's Drug Store on Thursday, June 26th, and if there is anything wrong with your eyesight do not fail to consult him.

On Monday morning, between the hours of 10 and 11, smoke was seen issuing from the residence of Mr. Ingram, Parkland, and soon afterwards fire broke out at the roof and sides. Willing workers were soon on hand, but, unfortunately, it was seen from the first that nothing could be done, as the fire had got too much headway before their arrival. Everything was a total loss and we understand there was no insurance. Mr. Ingram was in the field at the time when the fire broke out. It was at first thought that the building had been fired by lightning; but it was afterwards concluded that the fire was caused by burning soot, a quantity of which was found smouldering in the chimney, and fanned by the high winds, had suddenly broken out into flames.
